3D Seismic Interpretation and Reservoir Characterization Training Course

Introduction

3D Seismic Interpretation and Reservoir Characterization Training Course provides a comprehensive, practical understanding of how 3D seismic data, seismic attributes, structural interpretation, stratigraphic analysis, well data, and reservoir characterization can be integrated to improve subsurface understanding and support oil and gas exploration, field development, reservoir modelling, and production optimization. The course explores advanced seismic interpretation workflows, including horizon and fault picking, seismic-to-well ties, velocity modelling, time-depth conversion, seismic attribute analysis, structural framework building, and interpretation of depositional environments. Participants will develop the ability to transform complex geophysical datasets into reliable geological and reservoir insights while applying modern digital subsurface workflows, geoscience technologies, and data-driven interpretation techniques.

Through practical exercises and industry-based case studies, participants will learn how to integrate 3D seismic volumes with well logs, core data, petrophysical information, geological models, and production data to build robust reservoir characterization workflows. Emphasis is placed on identifying reservoir architecture, facies distribution, faults, stratigraphic traps, porosity trends, fluid contacts, compartmentalization, and hydrocarbon-bearing intervals. The training also introduces advanced approaches such as seismic inversion, quantitative interpretation (QI), attribute-driven reservoir characterization, geostatistical modelling, uncertainty analysis, and machine-learning-assisted interpretation. By the end of the course, participants will be better equipped to make confident subsurface decisions, reduce exploration and development risks, improve reservoir models, and maximize hydrocarbon recovery and asset value.
