The Rohingya Crisis: Law, Policy, and Protection Training Course

Introduction

The Rohingya crisis represents one of the most pressing humanitarian challenges of the 21st century, encompassing issues of human rights violations, forced displacement, and statelessness. The Rohingya Crisis: Law, Policy, and Protection Training Course provides an in-depth examination of the legal, policy, and protection frameworks surrounding the Rohingya population, equipping participants with the knowledge and skills to respond effectively. By combining international law, national policy perspectives, and humanitarian best practices, the course empowers professionals to navigate complex protection environments and contribute meaningfully to sustainable solutions.

Participants will gain comprehensive insights into the socio-political dynamics, human rights obligations, and protection mechanisms applicable to displaced populations. The course emphasizes practical approaches to policy formulation, advocacy, and implementation while fostering a deeper understanding of the ethical and legal responsibilities of organizations working in humanitarian contexts. This training is designed for legal practitioners, humanitarian workers, policy makers, and researchers committed to advancing the rights and protection of the Rohingya community.
