Course Curriculum & Modules

Urban Heat Mapping with GIS and Remote Sensing Training Course

Introduction

Urban Heat Mapping with GIS and Remote Sensing Training Course provides comprehensive, practical, and industry-focused knowledge for analyzing urban heat patterns, land surface temperature, heat islands, and climate-related risks using Geographic Information Systems (GIS), remote sensing, satellite imagery, spatial analysis, and geospatial modeling. The course develops advanced capabilities in extracting and interpreting thermal information from satellite datasets, integrating land use and land cover data, vegetation indices, built-up indices, surface characteristics, demographic information, and environmental variables to identify urban heat hotspots and vulnerable communities. Participants gain practical exposure to Earth observation technologies, spatial databases, image processing, cartographic visualization, and evidence-based urban climate analysis.

The training emphasizes sustainable urban planning, climate resilience, environmental management, disaster risk reduction, and data-driven decision-making. Participants learn how urban morphology, impervious surfaces, vegetation loss, population density, building density, and changing land use influence heat exposure. Through practical GIS workflows and global case studies, participants develop the ability to produce professional urban heat maps, interpret spatial patterns, assess heat vulnerability, and communicate results to planners, environmental agencies, infrastructure organizations, and policymakers. The course supports the development of climate-smart cities and informed strategies for reducing urban heat risks.
