AI Agents for Petroleum Engineering Workflows Training Course

Introduction

The AI Agents for Petroleum Engineering Workflows Training Course provides petroleum professionals with practical knowledge and advanced skills to integrate Artificial Intelligence (AI), Agentic AI, Large Language Models (LLMs), machine learning, automation, and intelligent workflow orchestration into modern petroleum engineering operations. Participants will learn how autonomous and semi-autonomous AI agents can retrieve technical information, analyze engineering datasets, execute repetitive tasks, generate engineering insights, assist with decision-making, and coordinate multi-step workflows while maintaining appropriate human-in-the-loop controls. Emphasis is placed on practical applications of generative AI, Retrieval-Augmented Generation (RAG), digital twins, predictive analytics, natural-language interfaces, data integration, and intelligent automation within petroleum engineering environments.

The course also develops the capabilities required to design reliable AI-powered petroleum engineering workflows that improve productivity, accelerate technical analysis, enhance decision quality, and reduce repetitive engineering workload. Participants will examine agent architectures, prompt engineering, tool integration, structured engineering reasoning, data governance, model validation, cybersecurity, explainable AI, and responsible AI deployment. Through industry case studies, workflow simulations, practical exercises, and petroleum engineering scenarios, learners will explore how AI agents can assist with tasks such as production surveillance, decline-curve analysis, well diagnostics, reservoir performance monitoring, drilling optimization, artificial-lift analysis, reserves evaluation, and field-development decision support. By the end of the program, participants will be able to identify high-value AI-agent opportunities, design petroleum engineering agent workflows, evaluate their performance, and develop implementation strategies aligned with digital oilfield transformation, intelligent operations, and next-generation energy technology.
