Basin Modeling and Petroleum Systems Analysis Training Course

Introduction

Basin Modeling and Petroleum Systems Analysis Training Course is designed to equip geoscientists, petroleum engineers, exploration geologists, and energy professionals with advanced knowledge and practical skills in sedimentary basin analysis, petroleum system modeling, hydrocarbon generation, migration, accumulation, and exploration risk assessment. This course explores the fundamental principles of basin evolution, tectonic development, sedimentary processes, burial history reconstruction, thermal maturity analysis, source rock characterization, and petroleum generation modeling

Participants will develop the ability to interpret burial and thermal histories, estimate source rock transformation ratios, assess hydrocarbon generation timing, evaluate trap formation relative to hydrocarbon migration, and identify potential exploration opportunities in both conventional and unconventional petroleum systems. The training highlights the importance of model calibration using vitrinite reflectance, bottom-hole temperatures, pressure data, and geochemical measurements to improve predictive reliability. By combining geological interpretation with computational modeling and risk-based analysis, this program enables participants to strengthen their technical capabilities, improve exploration efficiency, and contribute to digital transformation, subsurface intelligence, and data-driven hydrocarbon exploration across diverse sedimentary basins.
