Community Maternal Health Training Course

Introduction

Community Maternal Health is a critical public health domain focused on improving maternal survival, safe pregnancy outcomes, neonatal well-being, and equitable access to reproductive healthcare services. Despite global progress, maternal mortality remains a major challenge in low-resource and underserved communities due to limited healthcare access, lack of skilled birth attendants, poor antenatal care utilization, and insufficient health education. Community Maternal Health Training Course is designed to bridge these gaps by equipping community health workers, caregivers, and frontline healthcare providers with evidence-based maternal health knowledge, emergency response skills, and community engagement strategies.

This program emphasizes antenatal care (ANC), postnatal care (PNC), safe delivery practices, nutrition during pregnancy, high-risk pregnancy identification, and maternal mental health awareness. It integrates modern public health approaches such as digital health tracking, community outreach models, and behavior change communication (BCC) to strengthen maternal and newborn outcomes. By building local capacity, this course contributes to reducing maternal mortality ratio (MMR), improving skilled birth attendance, and enhancing women-centered reproductive healthcare systems in rural and urban communities.
