Complete Streets Planning Training Course

Introduction

Complete Streets Planning is an advanced urban planning and transportation framework designed to create safe, accessible, inclusive, sustainable, and multimodal streets that serve pedestrians, cyclists, public transport users, motorists, older adults, children, and people with disabilities. This training course provides comprehensive knowledge of complete streets design, multimodal transportation planning, pedestrian infrastructure, cycling networks, public transport integration, traffic calming, road safety, universal accessibility, placemaking, green infrastructure, and sustainable urban mobility. Participants will develop practical capabilities to transform conventional vehicle-oriented corridors into people-centered streets that support economic activity, social inclusion, climate resilience, and healthy communities.

Complete Streets Planning Training Course examines contemporary approaches to street hierarchy, transit-oriented development, active mobility, smart mobility, low-carbon transportation, public realm design, and data-driven mobility planning. Through international case studies, planning exercises, corridor assessments, and implementation strategies, participants will learn how governments, municipalities, developers, transport agencies, and planning professionals can coordinate infrastructure investments and policy interventions. The course emphasizes practical application, stakeholder engagement, evidence-based decision-making, and globally recognized sustainable urban development principles.
