Cycling Infrastructure Planning Training Course

Introduction

Cycling Infrastructure Planning Training Course provides comprehensive, practical knowledge for designing safe, connected, inclusive, and sustainable cycling networks that support active mobility, urban accessibility, traffic decongestion, and low-carbon transportation. The course covers cycling master planning, bicycle network design, protected cycle lanes, intersection safety, bicycle parking, traffic calming, multimodal integration, accessibility, road safety, infrastructure standards, transport demand management, and data-driven mobility planning. Participants will develop the technical capacity to plan cycling infrastructure that responds to population growth, changing mobility patterns, climate objectives, and sustainable urban development priorities.

The course integrates international best practices, engineering principles, urban planning approaches, stakeholder engagement, cycling demand analysis, feasibility assessment, implementation strategies, and performance monitoring. Participants will examine successful cycling systems from Europe, North America, Asia, Africa, and other regions while learning how to adapt global approaches to local contexts. Practical exercises and case studies will strengthen participants' ability to develop cycling network concepts, evaluate infrastructure alternatives, prepare implementation strategies, and support organizations in delivering safe and resilient cycling environments.

Course Objectives

By the end of the course, participants will be able to:
