Digital Competition Economics Training Course

Introduction

Digital Competition Economics examines how digital platforms, data-driven business models, algorithms, network effects, artificial intelligence, and online ecosystems are transforming competition and market power. Digital Competition Economics Training Course develops practical expertise in digital markets, competition economics, platform economics, market definition, pricing strategies, mergers and acquisitions, algorithmic competition, data economics, and digital antitrust. Participants will explore how technology companies create, maintain, and leverage market power while developing economically rigorous approaches for assessing competitive harm, innovation, consumer welfare, and market efficiency.

The course provides a practical and globally relevant understanding of digital competition policy, combining economic theory, empirical analysis, regulatory frameworks, and real-world case studies. Participants will examine competition issues involving major technology platforms, online marketplaces, digital advertising, app stores, cloud computing, artificial intelligence, and data-intensive businesses. Through applied exercises and international case studies, learners will strengthen their ability to conduct market analysis, evaluate competitive effects, interpret digital evidence, and develop effective competition-policy recommendations for rapidly evolving digital economies.
