District Energy Planning Training Course

Introduction

District Energy Planning is a strategic approach to designing, integrating, financing, and managing localized energy systems that deliver efficient, reliable, affordable, and low-carbon heating, cooling, and electricity services across urban districts and communities. District Energy Planning Training Course provides practical knowledge in district energy systems, energy master planning, renewable energy integration, energy efficiency, thermal networks, smart energy systems, demand forecasting, infrastructure planning, and sustainable urban development. Participants will develop the capacity to assess energy demand, identify suitable energy resources, evaluate district energy technologies, and formulate integrated energy plans aligned with climate resilience and net-zero development objectives.

The course emphasizes practical district energy planning methodologies, energy modelling, techno-economic assessment, stakeholder engagement, policy frameworks, infrastructure investment, and implementation strategies. Participants will examine international approaches to district heating and cooling, renewable district energy, waste-to-energy integration, thermal storage, smart grids, and public-private investment structures. Global case studies will demonstrate how cities and districts have used integrated energy planning to reduce emissions, improve energy security, optimize infrastructure, and support sustainable economic development.
