Electrical Submersible Pump Design and Optimization Training Course

Introduction

Electrical Submersible Pump (ESP) Design and Optimization Training Course provides a comprehensive, practical understanding of artificial lift systems, ESP selection, pump performance, well inflow, production optimization, and real-time surveillance. Electrical Submersible Pumps are critical artificial-lift solutions for maximizing production from mature, high-rate, and challenging oil wells. This course develops the technical capabilities required to design, select, install, operate, troubleshoot, and optimize ESP systems while improving well productivity, energy efficiency, equipment reliability, and total asset performance. Participants will explore advanced ESP design methodologies, pump curves, system matching, motor selection, cable sizing, gas handling, fluid properties, well constraints, and operating envelopes.

The course also emphasizes digital oilfield technologies, predictive maintenance, condition monitoring, data-driven optimization, and production analytics to support better ESP performance throughout the equipment lifecycle. Through engineering exercises and industry-based case studies, participants will learn how to diagnose common ESP problems including gas interference, pump-off, scaling, overheating, excessive vibration, motor failure, electrical faults, and unstable production. The program connects reservoir, well, production, electrical, and facilities engineering considerations to enable integrated artificial-lift decisions. Participants will leave with practical skills for optimizing ESP operating parameters, reducing downtime, controlling operating costs, extending equipment run life, and maximizing oil and gas production.

Course Duration

5 days
