Flow Assurance Modeling and Simulation Training Course

Introduction

Flow Assurance Modeling and Simulation Training Course is designed to equip oil and gas professionals with advanced technical knowledge and practical skills for managing complex multiphase flow systems across upstream, midstream, and offshore production operations. This course explores the latest flow assurance engineering techniques, multiphase flow simulation, hydraulic modeling, transient analysis, and predictive analytics used to identify and mitigate production challenges. Participants will gain practical insights into critical flow assurance risks, including hydrate formation, wax deposition, asphaltene precipitation, scale formation, corrosion, erosion, slugging, and severe pressure or temperature fluctuations. The program emphasizes the application of industry-standard simulation workflows, fluid characterization, thermodynamic modeling, and pipeline performance analysis to optimize hydrocarbon transportation and processing systems.

Participants will learn how to develop and interpret steady-state and transient simulation models, evaluate pipeline operating envelopes, assess chemical injection requirements, optimize insulation and heating strategies, and design effective mitigation plans for flow-related production interruptions. Through practical exercises, engineering scenarios, and industry-based case studies, delegates will explore how simulation can support field development planning, subsea tieback design, pipeline commissioning, shutdown and restart procedures, and troubleshooting of challenging production systems. The course promotes a proactive approach to flow assurance risk management, asset integrity, energy efficiency, and lifecycle cost optimization, enabling organizations to minimize unplanned shutdowns, improve production uptime, and extend the operational life of critical oil and gas infrastructure.

Course Duration

5 days
