Gas Gathering and Transmission System Optimization Training Course

Introduction

Gas Gathering and Transmission System Optimization Training Course is designed to equip oil and gas professionals with advanced technical knowledge and practical skills for optimizing natural gas collection, processing interfaces, pipeline transportation, and transmission network performance. This course explores the engineering principles, technologies, and industry best practices required to improve gas flow capacity, minimize pressure losses, enhance pipeline reliability, and maximize the performance of interconnected gas networks. Participants will gain practical insights into gas pipeline hydraulics, network modeling and simulation, compressor station optimization, pressure management, flow assurance, pipeline integrity management, and real-time operational monitoring to support efficient and reliable gas transportation.

The programme addresses critical challenges such as fluctuating inlet pressures, variable gas compositions, equipment limitations, pipeline congestion, unaccounted-for gas, and unplanned operational disruptions. By combining theoretical foundations with practical problem-solving techniques, the course enables participants to develop effective strategies for gas gathering system design improvement, transmission network performance optimization, asset lifecycle management, and sustainable pipeline operations. Ultimately, participants will be better prepared to support safe, reliable, economical, and environmentally responsible natural gas transportation across upstream, midstream, and integrated energy infrastructure.
