Gender and Environmental Sustainability Training Course

Introduction

Gender and Environmental Sustainability Training Course is designed to bridge the gap between gender equity and sustainable environmental practices. As global challenges like climate change, biodiversity loss, and environmental degradation intensify, understanding the intersection of gender and sustainability has become critical. This course empowers participants with knowledge, strategies, and practical tools to integrate gender-sensitive approaches into environmental planning, policy, and community initiatives. Participants will explore how women, men, and marginalized groups experience environmental challenges differently and how inclusive practices can drive resilient and sustainable solutions.

By leveraging innovative methodologies, real-world case studies, and evidence-based frameworks, this course equips learners to champion sustainable development with a gender lens. Emphasis is placed on actionable strategies, policy advocacy, community engagement, and leadership in environmental sustainability. Participants will gain critical insights into promoting equitable access to natural resources, climate adaptation, renewable energy, and sustainable livelihoods, ensuring both environmental resilience and social justice.
