Geostatistics for Resource Estimation Training Course

Introduction

Geostatistics for Resource Estimation Training Course is designed to equip professionals with advanced skills in mineral resource modeling, ore body estimation, spatial data analysis, and mining geostatistics workflows. In today's data-driven mining and exploration industry, accurate grade estimation, mineral reserve classification, and uncertainty quantification are critical for optimizing project value and reducing operational risk. This training integrates modern geostatistical methods, machine learning integration, variography, kriging techniques, and 3D geological modeling to support decision-making in exploration and mining projects.

Participants will gain hands-on expertise in applying Ordinary Kriging, Indicator Kriging, Sequential Gaussian Simulation, spatial interpolation, and resource classification standards. The course is tailored to bridge theory and practice using real mining datasets, ensuring professionals can confidently deliver high-precision resource models, grade control strategies, and mine planning inputs. With a strong focus on industry applications, this program empowers geologists, mining engineers, and data scientists to improve resource confidence levels, optimize drilling strategies, and enhance economic valuation of mineral deposits.
