Health Survey Design Training Course

Introduction

Health Survey Design is a cornerstone of modern public health intelligence, epidemiological research, and data-driven healthcare planning. In an era defined by digital health transformation, real-time surveillance systems, and evidence-based policy making, the ability to design accurate, reliable, and scalable health surveys is critical for governments, NGOs, research institutions, and global health agencies. Health Survey Design Training Course equips participants with advanced competencies in survey methodology, sampling techniques, questionnaire design, field data collection, and health data analytics, ensuring high-quality insights for decision-making in both routine and emergency health contexts.

With the rapid rise of AI-driven health analytics, mobile data collection tools, DHIS2 integration, and population health monitoring systems, professionals must master structured approaches to collecting and interpreting health data. This course bridges theoretical foundations with practical applications, enabling participants to design robust health surveys that align with WHO standards, Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), and global disease surveillance frameworks. Learners will gain hands-on experience in building scalable survey instruments, minimizing bias, and ensuring data validity in complex health environments.

Course Duration

5 days
