Heat-Resilient City Planning Training Course

Introduction

Heat-resilient city planning is an increasingly important component of sustainable urban development, climate adaptation, public health protection, and resilient infrastructure planning. Heat-Resilient City Planning Training Course provides comprehensive knowledge and practical skills for designing cities that can withstand rising temperatures, urban heat islands, extreme heat events, and climate-related risks. The course examines climate-responsive urban planning, heat vulnerability assessment, urban climate modelling, green and blue infrastructure, heat-resilient buildings, cool roofs, reflective surfaces, urban forestry, sustainable mobility, and climate-smart land-use planning.

Participants will explore innovative strategies for integrating heat adaptation into urban development policies, master plans, infrastructure investments, and community development programs. Through international case studies, practical planning approaches, and evidence-based climate adaptation techniques, participants will learn how cities can reduce heat exposure, protect vulnerable populations, improve thermal comfort, strengthen public spaces, and enhance long-term urban resilience. The course also emphasizes sustainable development, environmental management, disaster risk reduction, climate finance, and inclusive urban governance.
