High-Density Urban Development Planning Training Course

Introduction

High-Density Urban Development Planning Training Course provides comprehensive knowledge and practical skills for planning, designing, managing, and delivering compact, inclusive, resilient, and sustainable urban environments. The course examines urban density management, land-use planning, transit-oriented development, mixed-use development, smart cities, infrastructure capacity, affordable housing, urban regeneration, climate resilience, public spaces, and integrated transport planning. Participants will explore contemporary planning frameworks that enable cities to accommodate population growth while improving accessibility, livability, economic productivity, environmental performance, and social inclusion.

The training emphasizes evidence-based urban planning, spatial analysis, development control, infrastructure coordination, stakeholder engagement, and sustainable urban development strategies. Participants will examine international approaches to high-density development and apply practical planning techniques to real-world urban challenges, including housing shortages, congestion, infrastructure pressure, informal settlements, climate risks, and competing land-use demands. Global case studies will provide insights into successful high-density urban development and lessons applicable to rapidly growing cities.
