Integrated Petroleum Geoscience Training Course

Introduction

Integrated Petroleum Geoscience Training Course is designed to equip participants with advanced knowledge and practical skills in petroleum geology, geophysics, petrophysics, reservoir characterization, basin analysis, seismic interpretation, and subsurface data integration. The course explores how geological, geophysical, and engineering datasets can be integrated to improve hydrocarbon exploration, reservoir evaluation, field development planning, and production optimization. Participants will learn how to interpret seismic data, construct geological models, analyze depositional environments, evaluate source rocks, identify structural and stratigraphic traps, and assess reservoir quality using modern digital geoscience workflows, 3D geological modeling, quantitative interpretation, and data-driven subsurface analysis. Emphasis is placed on reducing exploration uncertainty, improving reservoir understanding, and supporting technically sound investment decisions throughout the petroleum exploration and production lifecycle.

The training highlights integrated reservoir characterization, machine learning applications in geoscience, seismic inversion, petrophysical evaluation, uncertainty quantification, and sustainable hydrocarbon resource management. Participants will examine how integrated geoscience supports prospect maturation, reserves estimation, well placement, reservoir connectivity analysis, and field redevelopment strategies in conventional and complex petroleum systems. By the end of the programme, learners will be better positioned to collaborate across subsurface disciplines, communicate technical findings effectively, and apply modern petroleum geoscience techniques to improve exploration success, reduce drilling risks, and maximize hydrocarbon recovery.

Course Duration

5 days
