Low-Carbon City Planning Training Course

Introduction

Low-Carbon City Planning is a strategic approach to transforming urban areas into climate-resilient, resource-efficient, energy-efficient, and low-emission communities while supporting inclusive economic growth and improved quality of life. Low-Carbon City Planning Training Course provides practical knowledge and advanced techniques for integrating climate action, sustainable urban development, green infrastructure, renewable energy, sustainable mobility, energy-efficient buildings, circular economy principles, and low-carbon spatial planning into city development frameworks. Participants will explore carbon reduction pathways, urban emissions assessment, climate-smart infrastructure, sustainable land-use planning, urban energy systems, and data-driven approaches for developing measurable low-carbon city strategies.

The course emphasizes practical planning tools, policy frameworks, investment approaches, and international best practices for accelerating urban decarbonization. Participants will examine how cities can establish greenhouse gas inventories, develop science-based emissions reduction targets, strengthen sustainable transport systems, improve building performance, expand nature-based solutions, and mobilize climate finance. Through international case studies and applied exercises, the course equips professionals to design implementable low-carbon urban development programs aligned with climate commitments, Sustainable Development Goals, and long-term net-zero pathways.
