Offshore Wind Farm Development Training Course

Introduction

Offshore Wind Farm Development Training Course provides a practical, project-focused foundation for professionals involved in the planning, development, financing, engineering, construction, and operation of offshore renewable energy projects. The program covers the complete offshore wind project lifecycle, from wind-resource assessment and site selection through marine spatial planning, environmental impact assessment, permitting, geotechnical investigation, turbine selection, foundation design, subsea cabling, grid integration, construction, commissioning, operations and maintenance (O&M), and decommissioning. Particular emphasis is placed on emerging industry priorities including floating offshore wind, large-scale turbines, HVDC transmission, energy storage, digital twins, AI-enabled predictive maintenance, remote monitoring, robotics, ESG, biodiversity protection, and supply-chain resilience. Current industry developments increasingly highlight digital twins for siting, wake modelling, turbine monitoring, extreme-weather assessment, and grid planning, making digitalization an important component of modern offshore wind development.

Participants will learn how to transform an offshore wind concept into a technically feasible, environmentally responsible, financially viable, and investment-ready project. Through real-world case studies, project simulations, technical workshops, group exercises, risk assessments, and development scenarios, learners will examine the challenges associated with deepwater sites, metocean conditions, marine logistics, stakeholder engagement, regulatory compliance, power evacuation, construction interfaces, and long-term asset performance. The course also explores how AI, IoT, digital twins, predictive analytics, autonomous inspection, and data-driven asset management are reshaping offshore wind O&M and lifecycle optimization. Recent research and industry activity demonstrate growing interest in digital-twin applications for wind-farm planning, turbine health monitoring, predictive maintenance, and floating-wind systems.

Course Duration
