Petroleum Field Development Economics Training Course

Introduction

Petroleum Field Development Economics Training Course is designed to equip oil and gas professionals with the advanced economic evaluation, financial modelling, and strategic decision-making skills required to plan, assess, and optimize petroleum field development projects. This comprehensive training course explores petroleum economics, field development planning, capital investment analysis, discounted cash flow modelling, net present value (NPV), internal rate of return (IRR), project payback period, breakeven analysis, production forecasting, and risk-adjusted economic evaluation. Participants will learn how to assess exploration and production opportunities, estimate capital and operating expenditures (CAPEX and OPEX), evaluate reservoir development alternatives, and quantify project profitability under different technical, commercial, and market conditions. The course also examines petroleum fiscal systems, production-sharing contracts, royalties, taxation, government take, and investment incentives to help professionals understand how fiscal structures influence project economics and investment decisions.

The programme emphasizes integrated asset economics, uncertainty analysis, sensitivity modelling, Monte Carlo simulation, economic limit determination, reserves valuation, portfolio optimization, and energy transition investment considerations. Participants will learn to compare alternative field development concepts, prioritize investment opportunities, optimize production strategies, and identify the economic drivers that influence long-term asset value. The course also addresses the impact of carbon pricing, methane emissions, decarbonization initiatives, decommissioning liabilities, and energy market transitions on petroleum project profitability. By combining technical reservoir and production considerations with financial and commercial evaluation, this training enables participants to strengthen investment proposals, improve capital allocation, manage economic risks, and maximize value throughout the petroleum field lifecycle.

Course Duration

5 days

Course Objectives

By the end of this training course, participants will be able to:

- Explain the fundamental principles of petroleum field development economics and their application to upstream investment decisions.
- Conduct comprehensive oil and gas project economic evaluations using industry-standard financial assessment techniques.
- Develop integrated CAPEX, OPEX, and lifecycle cost models for petroleum field development projects.
- Calculate and interpret NPV, IRR, discounted payback period, and profitability indices.
- Perform breakeven oil price analysis and determine the economic viability of development concepts.
- Apply petroleum fiscal modelling to assess royalties, taxation, production-sharing contracts, and government take.
- Evaluate alternative field development strategies using comparative economic analysis and value optimization.
- Integrate reservoir forecasts, production profiles, reserves estimates, and decline curves into financial models.
- Conduct sensitivity analysis, scenario planning, and Monte Carlo simulation to quantify economic uncertainty.
- Assess investment risk, probability-weighted outcomes, and risk-adjusted project returns.
- Optimize capital allocation through petroleum asset valuation and portfolio economics.
- Incorporate carbon costs, environmental obligations, and decommissioning expenses into lifecycle economic assessments.
- Prepare robust investment business cases, economic feasibility reports, and executive-level development recommendations.
