Population Aging and Economic Growth Training Course

Introduction

The global demographic landscape is undergoing a profound transformation as populations age at an unprecedented rate. Population aging has emerged as a critical challenge influencing labor markets, social protection systems, healthcare infrastructure, and economic growth trajectories worldwide. Understanding the intricate linkages between aging populations and economic performance is essential for policymakers, economists, and organizational leaders aiming to foster sustainable development. Population Aging and Economic Growth Training Course offers a comprehensive exploration of demographic shifts, economic implications, and strategic interventions that can support growth while addressing the challenges posed by aging populations. Participants will gain insights into labor productivity, pension systems, healthcare demands, and financial planning within the context of demographic change.

The course integrates advanced analytical frameworks, case studies, and evidence-based policy strategies to equip participants with the knowledge and practical skills required to navigate population aging dynamics effectively. Leveraging real-world examples, including national and regional experiences, learners will develop competencies to anticipate economic challenges and implement targeted interventions. Through interactive sessions, participants will explore innovative approaches to workforce management, intergenerational equity, fiscal sustainability, and social inclusion. By combining demographic analysis with economic forecasting, this training ensures that professionals can contribute to resilient and inclusive growth strategies.

Course Objectives

1. Analyze the economic impact of population aging using demographic and economic indicators.
2. Examine labor market transformations driven by aging populations.
3. Assess the sustainability of pension systems under demographic pressures.
4. Explore healthcare demand forecasting for aging societies.
