Population Analysis for Planners Training Course

Introduction

Population Analysis for Planners Training Course equips policymakers, urban planners, development practitioners, and researchers with advanced skills in demographic analysis, spatial planning, population forecasting, and evidence-based decision-making. As rapid urbanization, climate change, migration, and aging populations reshape communities worldwide, planners must rely on accurate population data, geospatial intelligence, and predictive analytics to design sustainable, inclusive, and resilient policies. This course integrates demographic methods, census interpretation, GIS tools, and population projections to enhance planning effectiveness at national, regional, and local levels.

Participants will gain hands-on experience in demographic modeling, population data visualization, migration analysis, fertility and mortality trends, and scenario-based forecasting. Through real-world case studies and applied exercises, learners will strengthen their capacity to translate population data into actionable strategies for infrastructure development, health systems, housing, education, environmental management, and disaster preparedness. The course emphasizes data-driven planning, digital demography, and policy innovation aligned with sustainable development goals and smart governance frameworks.
