Public Sector Problem Framing Techniques Training Course

Introduction

Public sector institutions increasingly operate in complex, uncertain, and politically sensitive environments where poorly defined problems lead to ineffective policies, wasted resources, and weak service delivery. Public Sector Problem Framing Techniques Training Course equips participants with structured, analytical, and participatory approaches to clearly define public problems before solutions are designed. The course emphasizes evidence-based policy analysis, systems thinking, stakeholder mapping, root cause analysis, and adaptive problem framing methods that support effective governance, public value creation, and sustainable reform outcomes.

Participants will develop the ability to move beyond symptom-based responses and adopt problem framing tools that clarify objectives, constraints, incentives, and institutional dynamics. The course integrates global best practices in public policy design, strategic planning, and results-based management while grounding learning in real public sector challenges. By the end of the training, participants will be able to frame policy and service delivery problems in a way that enables practical, scalable, and politically feasible solutions.
