Smart Cities Economics Training Course

Introduction

Smart Cities Economics Training Course provides a comprehensive understanding of the economic principles, financial frameworks, investment strategies, and policy mechanisms that support the development of sustainable, digitally enabled, and economically resilient smart cities. The course examines how cities can use smart technologies, data-driven decision-making, infrastructure investment, public-private partnerships (PPPs), urban innovation, and sustainable finance to improve productivity, service delivery, competitiveness, and quality of life. Participants will explore the economics of smart infrastructure, intelligent transportation, digital public services, renewable energy, smart utilities, affordable housing, urban mobility, and technology-enabled economic development.

The course also develops practical capabilities in smart city economic planning, cost-benefit analysis, investment appraisal, revenue generation, fiscal sustainability, economic impact assessment, and risk management. Through global case studies and applied exercises, participants will examine successful smart city models and identify strategies that can be adapted to different economic and institutional environments. Emphasis is placed on emerging trends such as artificial intelligence, Internet of Things (IoT), digital twins, green infrastructure, climate finance, urban data economics, circular economy models, and inclusive smart city development.
