Course Curriculum & Modules

Spatial Econometrics in Models and Applications Design Training Course

Introduction

Spatial econometrics is a powerful and evolving discipline at the intersection of econometrics, geographic information systems (GIS), and data science, designed to model and analyze spatial data patterns. In the age of big data, regional development, smart cities, and urban analytics, spatial econometrics plays a crucial role in understanding spatial dependencies and relationships across geographic regions. Spatial Econometrics in Models and Applications Design Training Course focuses on cutting-edge models, statistical applications, and spatial regression techniques to equip participants with hands-on skills to address complex spatial challenges in real-world contexts.

With the rising demand for geospatial analytics, data-driven policymaking, and advanced regional planning strategies, professionals and researchers must master spatial econometric tools to make informed decisions. This course combines spatial lag models, error models, and spatial panel data frameworks with case-based applications using modern software such as R, GeoDa, and Python. Designed for economists, urban planners, data scientists, and analysts, the course offers a practical and theoretical framework for spatial data modeling, ensuring relevance in sectors like transportation, housing, public health, and environmental policy.
