Training Course on Human-Wildlife Conflict Mitigation in Agricultural Landscapes

Introduction

Human-wildlife conflict (HWC) poses a significant threat to biodiversity, food security, and rural livelihoods. In agricultural landscapes, this conflict intensifies due to habitat loss, land-use change, and expanding human settlements. To sustainably manage these interactions, there is a pressing need to equip farmers, extension officers, conservationists, and policymakers with the tools and knowledge to reduce conflict while promoting coexistence. Training Course on Human-Wildlife Conflict Mitigation in Agricultural Landscapes is designed to address the root causes, explore innovative conflict mitigation strategies, and enhance resilience among vulnerable communities.

This course integrates practical, evidence-based approaches to understanding HWC dynamics in farming regions. Through expert-led modules, real-world case studies, and participatory learning methods, participants will gain critical insights into ecological principles, community engagement, policy frameworks, and technological interventions. By the end of the program, stakeholders will be empowered to apply adaptive, locally relevant solutions that protect both agricultural productivity and wildlife conservation.

Course Objectives

- Understand the ecological drivers of human-wildlife conflict.
- Analyze landscape-level patterns influencing wildlife movement.
- Evaluate socio-economic impacts of wildlife on farming communities.
- Implement conflict prevention strategies through habitat management.
