Training Course on ICT for disaster management, Nairobi and Mombasa, Kenya

The advance of information and communication technology (ICT) has added a new dimension to research on disaster relief in terms of both potential problems and potential solutions. Concurrently, the evolving discipline of informatics has been leading to a more rigorous consideration of the implications of ICT development for collaborative information gathering and other activities. Some real-life scenarios indeed demonstrate that ICTS are bringing remarkable changes in response to disasters and emergencies.

By looking at various real-world examples, the course will analyze the key challenges that are related to the access, verification, scale, and implementation of ICT technologies in disaster response and preparedness. Professionals that are willing to explore new strategies in the field of disaster response will find this program more helpful.
