Urban Energy Planning Training Course

Introduction

Urban Energy Planning Training Course provides a comprehensive framework for developing integrated, resilient, low-carbon, and economically viable energy systems for rapidly growing cities. The course examines urban energy demand forecasting, energy efficiency, renewable energy integration, smart grids, district energy systems, sustainable transport, energy access, climate resilience, and energy transition strategies. Participants gain practical knowledge of urban energy modelling, spatial energy planning, infrastructure optimization, energy policy, investment planning, and data-driven decision-making to support sustainable urban development and net-zero ambitions.

The training emphasizes practical approaches for aligning urban energy systems with climate action, sustainable development, and long-term infrastructure planning. Participants explore how municipalities, utilities, planners, developers, investors, and policymakers can coordinate energy investments through integrated planning frameworks, public-private partnerships, energy-efficient urban design, and innovative financing mechanisms. International case studies from leading cities demonstrate how effective energy planning can improve energy security, reduce emissions, strengthen resilience, and support inclusive economic growth.
